LESSON NOTES.

Consider Ourselves.

There is a man of Pharisee who displays himself in cultivating a sense of superiority to other people. We give ourselves a good reputation by the sternness with which we rebuke the evil which shows itself in someone else. We are here admonished to consider ourselves along the line of our own weakness under affliction. The sense that we also may commit a fault should not keep us from the work of reformation, but it should govern the spirit in which we undertake it. It is as one weak man helping another weak man, but as a superior being reaching down to a lowly fashion to help someone else. The greatest workers among fallen humanity have been those whose own lives kept them constantly reminded that they were subject to the same temptations.

Burden Bearing.

There are two parts to this passage, verses 2 and 3, which in some ways seemed contradictory but they are not. There is a slight difference in the word burden in the two passages, yet in substance they mean the same thing. In the first the word burden refers to the load of sin or iniquity, which is the common lot of mankind. In verse 3 this is particularized, and made the one particular burden which may beset the individual. How are the two verses to be reconciled with each other? The principle is this: No man has the right to put the responsibility of his own burden upon anyone else; for each man shall bear his own burden, but on the other hand, because each man knows what it is to bear the burden for himself, he is to learn to sympathize with his fellowmen, and therefore we are to bear—another's burdens.
